Red and blue flag with yellow sun

No red, white and blue celebration would be complete without an All-American flag pie. Here are two versions of banter cake for you to try: an unmed baked cheesecake and a white cake in the oven. For a stunning holiday effect, put a couple of sparks on top of the cake, and when darkness falls and fireworks start to burst, turn on sparks and dish up dessert. 1. Unc baked cheesecake flag pie This shiny, festive banter cake cheesecake won't heat your kitchen when you do so with a creamy mixture of unc baked cheesecake on top of a graham cookie crust. Use blueberries for stars and strawberries for stripes, and you have a superb dessert flag pie. Watch the video to watch Chef John put it together. This stunning red, white and blue flag cake begins with white cake mix to simplify things so you can concentrate on creating the layers that turn each slice into your own flag. You'll want to watch the video to see how it all builds up – it's actually easier than you might think. Related: Get patriotic recipes for a very festive Fourth of July, Memorial Day, and Flag Day. Raising a teenager is tense and complicated, even under the best circumstances. But these red flags call for additional vigilance: Tattoos, while the growing popularity of tattoos in the United States may make it easier for parents to dismiss them as harmless fashion, research published in a pediatric health journal reveals that tattoos are a kind of shorthand used by high-risk teens. The study, which found that between 10 and 16 percent of teens between the ages of 12 and 18 have permanent tattoos (compared to between 3 and 9 percent of the general population), discovered a high correlation between tattoos and substance abuse, struggling at school and crummy grades. Tattooed teenagers are four times more likely to have had sex as their fellow free tattoos. Friends who have not known reluctance to bring new friends into the house should raise the suspicion that drugs and alcohol are in the picture. Girls who develop early are not only these girls more likely to be victims of bullying and sexual overture, some research relates early puberty in girls to alcohol use. Kids you've caught smoking Once you've caught a child lighting up, it's a good bet that alcohol is next on the menu. Close your liquor. Girls You Suspect are Sexually Active A study by Yale University found that about half of sexually active girls between the ages of 15 and 17 seriously underestimate the risks of unprotected sex. The between the ages of 15 and 19 have the highest risk of all groups for chlamydia and gonorrhea STDs. So if you suspect your daughter is sleeping with children, make sure she understands the health risks, especially HIV, and how to prevent them. Primary, are the three colors that cannot be produced by mixing other colors. All rainbow colors can be made using primary colors in addition to black and white. Green is a secondary color. Secondary colors are those that can be produced by mixing two of the primary colors together. Orange and violet are two other secondary colors. The tones of the secondary colors are halfway between the two primary colors that produce them. Colored relationships are displayed with a color wheel. Advice - there is no shortage of it. From a colleague who was once in his shoes to the self-help guru with a weekly podcast, you can get input on almost any situation he faces. But is the advice good? While most people are really trying to be helpful, many of the advice you get needs caution tape around this, says relationship expert April Masini, author of the Ask April advice column. Bad advice is rife, he says. It may come from someone who means well, but doesn't know all the facts, and so gives you bad advice. Normally, you know these sources. They're kind people who just don't get it or just don't get you. Here are six signs that the wisdom you're getting is best ignored.1. The person isn't qualifiedTotyone has an opinion, but that doesn't mean his thoughts are valuable, says Bruce W. Cameron, a Licensed Counselor based in Dallas and host of LA Talk Radio. If the achievements or background of giving advice do not suggest to someone who might even talk about the matter, don't feel free to ignore what he or she says. If the person is a random person and not even in business, it is time to reassess the credibility of the council and the womanor, says Be especially cautious if the advice comes from someone who may not take into account their best interests, adds Masini. People who have a history of looking out for you, and who care about you and your accomplishments, are the best sources of advice, he says. When someone has a motivation for you not to come in the first place, consider that along with your advice. What's on the surface isn't always what's really going on. Tips that you have little or no context about you or your business is often bad advice. Most often, people give advice based on their experience, which may not align with the situation the recipient is dealing with, says Jeremy Greenberg, a business strategist who has worked with companies like Capital One and Avon.Si you get tips that is more about someone else's experience, make sure the situation reflects yours exactly. It often doesn't, he says, adding that this is especially true for situations like making a career move or relocating. All depend on personal preferences. 3. The person speaks, but does not listen If the advice you are receiving is filled with shoulds Cautious. Good advice requires a context that can only be learned when the other person takes the time to ask them questions. Most good advice gives clarification questions before making your words of wisdom, wisdom, Cameron.4. The council is focused on the final outcome and not the Be cautious of councils that focuses on the decision and not the steps that lead to it, Greenberg says. The evaluation process is as important as the final answer. Analyzing the pros and cons of your choices is helpful not only to make the best decision for you, but also be happy with your decision to minimize repentance, he says. When you seek advice it is because you want objectivity, a second thoughtful opinion. But if the person's input is full of feeling, it might be a good idea to pass. Greenberg says. An overly emotional subcurrent is probably a sign of the adviser's bias, he says. He or she may have an agenda that doesn't match yours. 6. The council flies your instinctsSis your inner voice disagrees with someone's advice, go with your gut. Chances are you're right, says Masini.La of asking for advice is that we often know what to do. Don't quit. Listen to yourself. You know each other better than anyone else. How to respond to bad advice When you recognize that tips are bad, you don't need to close someone as soon as a red flag appears. There's nothing wrong with listening to tips that aren't necessarily helpful, Greenberg says. While it may seem counterintuitive, you can learn something about that person that may be useful later or may develop arguments against it in your head. The important point is to avoid being swayed when you know the advice is questionable. If they're persistent and it's causing you anguish, thank you and say they've given you a lot of thinking and you need time to process things, Greenberg says. Many will want their commitment over a decision, he says. Refuse to provide this by briefly explaining that they have been very helpful and now you have to think about it on your own. But skip the temptation to debate, says Masini. When you argue the advice you have decided is bad advice, you are engaging in a negative relationship dynamic, he says. There is not much benefit to you in this conversation. Instead, recognize and disassociate yourself.
